Item	Decisions and actions	Action
1	Welcome, Apologies and Declarations of Interest The chair welcomed members to the meeting and noted apologies (listed below). Introductions were made around the table. The chair proposed moving item 5 (Membership and Terms of Reference) to the end of section 1 (to become item 7). This change was agreed . There were no declarations of interest.
2	Work Programme 2016/2017 The chair introduced the item and asked members if anything should be added to the work programme. Ian Hughes, Head of Programmes, advised the board that there would be a discussion on Britain exiting the EU at the next LGA Leadership Board on the 14 th September 2016. This would focus on EU funding issues and the need to secure resources until 2020. The discussion would also consider EU law and the impact changes in legislation would have on local government. Constitutional issues would also be taken into account and the need to build a future legal framework. In the discussion which followed, members made the following points: <ul style="list-style-type: none">• Members asked whether there had been an indication from the civil service of what the negotiation strategy would look like. It was important for local government to press for an indication of this.• Members queried whether there was a list of asks for local improvements and highlighted that this was an opportunity to make the case for localising powers that came back from Europe.• Many city economies were driven by research and many were reliant on European funding. The distribution of resource after the EU exit, therefore, would need to be done in a fair and transparent way. Most research was carried out through international collaboration and universities should be allowed to continue these partnerships. Local government needed to work with universities on this.

- It was highlighted that the exit negotiations should also be seen as an opportunity to develop and improve research.
- Government would need to be pushed for clarity on what would be funded and whether EU money currently funding local government would be replaced. Distribution mechanisms should also be clarified. Local government would need to stand together on this issue.
- There were concerns about the status of EU residents without British citizenship and the impact this was having on communities. The government needed to be pressed to resolve this. Members also made the point that some fractures in society were not related to the decision to leave the EU but that local authorities were well placed to address these.
- Members emphasised that the LGA's contribution to the exit plans needed to be unique and distinctive to ensure it did not get lost in the many issues which would be raised.
- It was highlighted that EU regulations on procurement could now be relaxed to give more opportunities to local business. However, members emphasised it was important to maintain rules that prevented industrial disputes and avoided policies which only allowed one industrial policy to operate in one part of the country.

Decision:

1. The board agreed the draft work programme for 2016/2017.

Action:

1. Officers to take forward work as directed by members.

3 Inclusive Growth Commission Update

In absence of Claire Hogan, Philip Clifford (Senior Adviser) updated the board on the progress of the commission. He advised members that the commission had held evidence sessions and were trying to build an evidence base for a new model for growth. The RSA were currently considering possible key debates and were asking for written evidence from all stakeholders. It was estimated the commission would conclude next year.

He asked members to consider the questions in appendix A and suggest any areas that they would like to see a focus on. He also requested that members look over the planned future activities at party conferences and advise if there were areas they would like prioritised.

In the discussion which followed, members made the following points:

- It was felt that an international perspective was lacking in the report and there was concern that it might not present solutions which would work at scale.
- There needed to be concentration on economically successful places and thought put into how to maintain economic growth in these areas.
- Smaller cities experiencing problems of their own success should be considered. Policies on the greenbelt needed updating as it was preventing expansion and the building of new housing. However, members emphasised that spatial and lack of housing were problems in larger cities as well. Members also raised concerns that some contaminated land in local areas had been left untreated. This needed to be treated and used.
- Local government structure was complex and outdated, and current suggestions from government were not addressing this. As a result, local communities were trying to speak with one voice but were unable to.
- It was suggested that the problems of assertions without evidence should be raised in one of the seminars. The issue of inclusive growth without inclusive economies was discussed, and it was felt there had been an assumption that places were the same as communities. Investment needed to be made in the nature of place to encourage people to continue to live there. It was felt that the paperwork was vague on this point.
- Procurement and supply chains needed to be more inclusive in economies.
- In scale, the least inclusive parts of the country were urban areas. It was felt this was a point the board should be making.
- Demographics were also discussed, and the imbalance of the population when those aged 45+ were finding their skills were becoming less relevant as the skills of younger people became more so. The point was also made that young people were more mobile - there were no longer jobs for life and young people were being forced to move in order to progress. Solutions needed to be found to address both problems.
- Universities were discussed in relation to the above issue, and the idea that if a city established a university, it would retain its young population. The evidence illustrated however, that young people applied to universities based on a city's lifestyle. It was further felt that there were different demographic divides in all societies and it was important to look at the generality rather than individual cases. Projects needed to benefit more than a few hundred people.
- The point was made that there was a danger of focusing too much on wider areas in preference to local areas. Local level solutions should be worked on to connect people back into the local economy.

- However, members emphasised that it was important to recognise the relationships between areas surrounding each other and that all of these places needed to be inclusive. For example, all the more economically inclusive parts of greater Manchester surrounding it related to it economically.
- A key objective would be to enable people that lived in an urban centre to earn the same amount as those that commuted there. In addition, having a high employment rate in an area did not necessarily indicate greater inclusivity. Manchester for example, had a large student population in part time work which was reflected in average wages there.
- Members asked at what point Britain had been more inclusive. It was acknowledged that this was a contested point, but the evidence suggested Britain had been more inclusive 40 years ago.

Decisions:

Members:

1. Noted the commission's activity and findings to date.
2. Provided an initial steer on the focus of the LGA's submission of evidence to the Commission's 'Prospectus of Inquiry'.
3. Provided a steer on how the LGA might best support this work in light of significantly changed national context and the emerging priorities of Regions board.

Actions:

1. Officers to take forward work as directed by members above.

4 Leading Places Project Update

Philip Clifford, Senior Adviser, introduced the item, advising members that the Leading Places Project was a joint initiative between the LGA, the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) and Universities UK (UUK). The project's aim was to explore how best to strengthen collaborative leadership between councils and the higher education sector through a pilot in six areas.

He advised the board that the six areas were currently choosing challenge themes to take forward with the help of facilitators (the Leadership Foundation). Gloucestershire had now held their Senior Leadership Group Meeting and had confirmed their challenge theme. The other five areas were expected to hold meetings and confirm challenge themes by the end of September. There would be a national event in November where pilot areas would share their ideas and progress so far.

He advised the board that a website for the project was now up and running and that there had been significant interest in the project. Officers were currently considering whether there was sufficient interest to run a second phase and asked members for suggestions on taking this forward and on what basis pilot areas should be selected.

In the discussion which followed, the following point was made:

- The project might be of benefit to areas that had not had an area review on further education as it could help to change the shape of this.

Decision:

1. Members noted the update.

Action:

1. Officers to continue to update members as the project progressed.

5 Membership and Terms of Reference

Decision:

1. The board noted membership for 2016/2017 and agreed the terms of reference for 2016/2017.

6 Devolution Update

Philip Clifford, Senior Adviser, introduced the item and advised the board on activity that had taken place since the last board meeting. The discussion paper 'What Next for Devolution?' had been launched at the LGA Conference in July, a guide to setting up a Combined Authority had been prepared by Shared Intelligence and an international comparison of sub-national governance arrangements produced by Professor Robin Hambleton. The board's policy officers have supported the finance team with work on business rates reform, ensuring that there was a voice for City Regions in the negotiations on this. Officers had also recently attended a series of DCLG workshops on devolution.

The next key piece of work would be the autumn statement and officers would be working to press the case for devolution to government, encouraging national government to stay the course and look to go beyond the existing devolution deal process. The chief executives of the established combined authorities would also be assembled as a separate group as part of the improvement support offer.

In the discussion which followed, members made the following points:

- Members asked how the public fitted into the debate. Members were advised that points 10.1 and 10.3 in the paper explained the communities and devolution event taking place in October and the campaign film due to be launched the same month.

- There had been a consultation on West Midlands Combined Authority which around 2,200 people had responded to. Members expressed concern that the majority of the public were not aware of devolution or had no interest in it. However, it was pointed out that the public were aware and involved with plans for devolution in the Tees Valley area.
- Members suggested that it would be beneficial to work with the Department of Education and secure devolution on areas such as the plans for academies and area reviews.
- Members felt that the government needed to put forward a more objective set of proposals that local authorities could work with and provide clarity on mayors and business rates (as this was an area closely related to devolution). It was acknowledged that the LGA commissioned study of international models of sub-national governance offered a range of alternatives for consideration.

Decision:

1. Members noted the update.

Action:

1. Officers to take forward work as directed by members.

7 Note of the Previous Meeting

Decision:

1. Members agreed the notes as an accurate summary of the meeting.

Jasbir Jhas, Senior Adviser, introduced the report, updating members on activity on skills and employment and proposing a way forward for the next two years.

A discussion with members followed.

Decisions:

1. Members noted the update and the recommendations.
